As a new entrant to coaching and consulting, I bring a unique perspective rooted in my upbringing in te ao Māori and a deep understanding of the complexities between leadership and rangatiratanga. My passion lies in the development of Māori within corporate spaces and the promotion of our visibility in senior leadership roles. I also enjoy supporting individuals to become culturally safe, understand mātauranga and tikanga Māori.

My background prior to Updraft was in the culture and heritage sector, which has provided me with a wealth of experiences and diverse insights that I bring to my work. Throughout my journey, I have witnessed the transformative power of culture, heritage, and storytelling, which has shaped my approach to coaching and supporting others. I strive to encourage individuals to embrace their cultural identity while at the same time excelling in their professional lives.

My personal connections and experiences have further shaped my understanding of the importance of balance and holistic growth. I believe that real success extends beyond the workplace and must include a person's well-being and fulfillment in their personal lives as well.

Through my work with Updraft, my whāinga, my goal, is to create a bridge between Māori cultural values and the corporate world, offering guidance and support to Māori professionals navigating the complexities of multi-cultural leadership. Together we can break down barriers, challenge stereotypes, and create a future where all voices, including Māori voices, are heard, and respected.

I am excited to embark on this journey with you to share my vision of a more inclusive and equitable Aotearoa.
